Introduction:

Learn a new form of high intensity interval training with turbulent training. Come away with practical interval training exercises that can boost your training in group fitness, small group and personal training. Get results in a short period of time. Cause some turbulence and turn up the intensity!

Turbulent means: energy that is irregular, chaotic and often unpredictable.

Principles of Turbulent Training

- high intensity intervals (HIIT)
- change the exercises frequently
- differ the intensity of the exercise
- alter the numbers of reps and sets regularly
- vary the focus of the training workout

Rate of Perceived Exertion (RPE)

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	----

- 2 - 3: Very easy
- 4 - 6: Moderate
- 7 - 9: Hard to very hard
- 10 +: Maximum

Metabolic Conditioning Overview

- Anaerobic Power (RPE 10+)
- Anaerobic Capacity (RPE 9-10)
- High Aerobic Conditioning (RPE 7-9)

Interval Variations

Short burst: high intensity short duration with equal or greater recovery

Rounds: groups of exercises for a set number of rounds

Reps: set number of reps for time

Ladder: Increasing number of repetitions or time at hard to breathless effort with a set recovery

Pyramid: increasing number or repetitions or time at hard to breathless effort with set recovery followed by decreasing number of repetitions or time.

Finish the Minute: A spontaneous portion of each minute: high endurance to anaerobic capacity training

Hard, Harder, Hardest: 20 seconds at hard work, 20 seconds at lactate threshold, 20 seconds breathlessness.
